Honors 391AH and Honors H391AH Sophomores-Serve Seminar with colloquium (2 credits)

Course Description:
Students enroll in a special section of Honors 391AH and also in its associated honors colloquium Honors H391AH, which together carry 2 credits and constitute a single course. This course is the second of two courses in the Sophomores-Serve program and investigates the larger contexts and interconnectedness of individual service placements. A major component of this course is learning to present service-learning experiences and research findings to multiple audiences such as peers, community organizations, and policy-makers to effect change. Written and oral communication is strengthened through development of infographics, policy briefs, or white papers. Students reflect upon the service-learning experience, summarize lessons learned to share with the incoming group of Sophomores-Serve students, and consider building upon the service placement to become an honors thesis or project. Enrollment is limited to students who will be in the second semester of the Sophomores-Serve service learning program.
