Honors RAP: Topics in Health and Science

This Honors RAP is a great choice for those interested in exploring different philosophical issues the medical community as well as sciences. Located in Sycamore House, one of the first-year buildings in the Commonwealth Honors College Residential Community, students will enroll in a general education course as well as a one-credit seminar designed to engage students in discussions about current events in health and science fields.

The seminar will focus on issues and/or innovations that are reported on within the medical and public health fields. Students will pay particular attention to those situations which involve ethical discussions or are related to inequities of access. This Honors RAP is open to students of any major with an interest in the health sciences; students will be roommates with someone in their Honors RAP.
