FACULTY LECTURE SERIES 2011

INSPIRED BY THE HONORS SEMINAR "IDEAS THAT CHANGED THE WORLD"

NICHOLAS McBRIDE
Associate Professor,
Journalism

Nicholas McBride has been teaching journalism at the University of Massachusetts Amherst since 1990. His courses include newswriting, the philosophy of journalism, community journalism, journalism ethics, and covering race. He has been a reporter for the Springfield Daily News, Washington Post, Afro-American, and Christian Science Monitor (Washington Bureau). He was a fellow at the Center for Teaching as well as a community service fellow. In 2005, McBride was awarded the university's Distinguished Teaching Award in recognition of his outstanding accomplishments.

Art as Intellectualism

Tuesday, November 29, 6:30 pm

CAMPUS CENTER AUDITORIUM

Using multimedia, this talk looks at "unusual suspects" to expand the definition of intellectualism and what it means to be smart. McBride shows how a boxer, a jazz singer, and a graffiti artist use their talents to represent intellectual work.
